PICTURE #1

Winter 1944-1945

Proud daddy Wilford Holds baby Douglas Wilford, the third and last son born to Ada and I. I am standing on the sidewalk facing our home at 738 6th Avenue. Across 6th Avenue is Ursel George's home seen between the pine trees. There used to be a wire fence and a stragley peach tree at the right of the pine tree towards "L" street. This was Doug's first snow storm.

Picture #2. Douglas is sitting on our front steps. The house faces north and behind him is the porch, then the double panel screen door. East of that is a part of the double front window.

Picture #3. Mamma is helping little Douglas to stand, diaper and all, in front of the screen door, and the old mail box west of it.

#4 I think this was a year later, or winter of 1945-1946. Douglas is on the "apron" at the rear of the house. Looking north the lawn is still about the same. But the tree is a lot larger. The houses farther north have all been changed.

We wanted to move from 29 I street. we looked at a lot of houses, but could find nothing that suited us. Mamma knew that the blessed event was not far away. One day she came to me all excited, and said, "Wilford I have found the house I want!" So I promptly went to 738 6th avenue and bought the house right away. I borrowed forty one hundred dollars from the Deseret Federal Savings to complete the Seventy five hundred dollars the place cost.

This was the last part of June and we moved in right away. Mamma went up to the Hospital and found little Douglas almost waiting for her. They wouldn't let me into the delivery room, but Ada did alright any way, and in a little while they showed little Doug to me.
