New leader beckons offended to 'come back'

SALT LAKE CITY — LDS Church President Howard W. Hunter greeted conference-goers at the morning session of the 164th Semi-annual General Conference by reiterating his message of returning to the fold, made when called to the presidency in June.

"To those who have transgressed or been offended, we say come back," said the spiritual leader of the 9-million-member church.

"The path of repentance, though hard at times, lifts one ever upward and leads to perfect forgiveness.

"To those who are hurt or are struggling and afraid, we say let us stand with you and dry your tears. Come back. Stand with us in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints."

Elbert Peck, editor of Sunstone, a magazine of academic articles on Mormonism, welcomed Hunter's remarks, saying he felt they were meant for everyone, "for anyone who feels estranged.

"It's the call of the good shepherd and it would be hard to imagine his remarks wouldn't include those who were excommunicated," Peck said.

Hunter began his presidency amid turmoil in the church over excommunications last year of a handful of Mormon intellectuals and feminists.

"It's something that's very important," Peck said about hearing Hunter's remarks Saturday. Given the ill health of Hunter's predecessor, Ezra Taft Benson, Saturday's morning session marked the first time in five years that the church president has directly addressed a General Conference audience.

"His words call to you in ways that others do not," Peck said of the president's remarks. "They called to me to be a better Christian."

While preaching of acceptance and forgiveness, Hunter said, "We will, as you would expect us to do, continue to hold to the high standards of conduct which define a latter-day saint.

Washington D.C. member happy to sustain Hunter

By BRYON SAXTON
Standard-Examiner staff

SALT LAKE CITY — LDS Church members at Temple Square Saturday said they were excited to be a part of history with their sustaining of Howard W. Hunter as the 164-year-old church's 14th president.

Mansfield

Hunter was sustained in his new calling Saturday during a rare solemn assembly — a church ceremony generally reserved for occasions when members are asked if they concur with the selection of a new church president.

Jennifer Mansfield, 20, of Washington, D.C., was at Temple Square Saturday and recalled how Hunter reacted when threatened with a bomb at a Brigham Young University fireside.

Mansfield, who was at the fireside, said the man held a box to Hunter's head and made demands that Hunter refused to comply with. "We thought, 'What an object lesson.' He (Hunter) just stood there firm," she said.

Mansfield said Cody Judy — a former Box Elder County resident serving a one-to-15-year prison sentence in the incident — was eventually arrested and taken away while Hunter proceeded with his talk, opening his remarks with, "we all have opposition."

Because of the incident and the faith Hunter displayed, Mansfield said she revered his sustaining with personal satisfaction.

"It felt good," she said.

Violence between pro-army militiamen and pro-democracy crowds killed at least 13 people and wounded at least 110 from Wednesday through Friday.

Pro-democracy leaders called off a rally Saturday because of fears they would be attacked by heavily armed militiamen.

President Clinton told U.S. soldiers in a radio address Saturday that they were proving "the United States will stand up for democracy.".

U.S. Special Forces teams flew in Saturday to the interior cities of Hinche and Ouanaminthe to speak with local authorities about restoring democracy, an American military spokesman, Maj. Ken Fugett, told the AP.

A U.S. Senate delegation and U.S. Ambassador William Swing met Saturday evening at Haitian army headquarters with Cedras and army chief of staff Brig. Gen. Philippe Biamby, who have pledged to step down by Oct. 15.

Cedras and Biamby were key leaders of the September 1991 coup that ousted Aristide.

Sens. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., and John Warner, R-Va., both told reporters that Cedras assured them he would step down by Oct. 15. "We asked the question directly. He was uneqivocal," Dodd said Saturday night.

Asked to characterize the coup leaders, Dodd replied: "Honorable is not quite the word I would use to describe them."

Several countries have offered asylum to the coup leaders, including Argentina. "There won't be any trouble finding a place to go," U.S. Embassy spokesman Stanley Schrager said.

Dodd said groups such as FRAPH "are a real threat to stability."

At the headquarters of the pro-army Front for the Advancement and Progress of Haiti, where gunshots stopped pro-democracy rallies Wednesday and Friday, gunmen boasted they would kill anyone who tried to shut them down.

"Even if I die, my blood will still have life to kill you," said Eric Jean, 35. He bragged that he would have killed hundreds of his countrymen if he had been there Friday when pro-Aristide supporters approached.

Also Saturday, mobs ransacked warehouses in a seaside district, and Americans soldiers stood by while Haitian police fired tear gas into one building to clear out the rioters.

Other Haitians pelted rocks and broken bottles from a store rooftop — allegedly owned by police lieutenant — to protect it from looters.

But the looting wasn't indiscriminate.

Michel Pierssaint, whose warehouse is next door to two ransacked warehouses, said he didn't fear looters — just organized thieves seeking to take advantage of disorder. The two sacked businesses were owned by coup backers, he said.

"The people who are looting knew where to go," Pierssaint said. "They've been looting here for two days and haven't touched my store."

The looters were keeping people away from his warehouse, Pierssaint said.

"They say, 'Don't worry. You're a good guy.'" tries, were unanimous in their praise of the deals. But they warned that results — that is, increased sales — would be what counted.

And Andrew H. Card Jr., president of the American Automobile Manufacturers Association, expressed disappointment that more headway was not made in the auto sector.

"No agreement with Japan can be meaningful without addressing the auto and auto parts sector," he said.

However, Clyde Prestowitz, the president of Economic Strategy Institute, a Washington trade research group and frequent critic of administration trade policy, said he was "pleasantly surprised" with what the administration had been able to achieve.

The dollar, which hit record lows earlier this year because of market fears that a trade war could erupt between the world's two biggest economies, should rise in value when trading opens Monday, Prestowitz predicted.

"The administration has demonstrated that it can be firm with Japan without blowing up the whole U.S.-Japanese relationship," he said.

The trade agreements were only reached in the 20th hour of a marathon negotiating session that saw Japanese Foreign Minister Yohei Kono and Trade Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto shuttle back and forth between Kantor's offices and their hotel room throughout the night.

The administration had set a midnight Friday deadline for reaching deals or hitting Japan with sanctions.

Saturday's outcome was a far cry from last February when President Clinton and then-Prime Minister Morihiro Hosokawa decided to let a summit meeting collapse rather than paper over their differences in the framework talks.

These negotiations were started in July 1993 and were supposed to put U.S.-Japan trade relations on sounder, less acrimonious footir But up until Saturday, they had n worked that way.
