Lee condemns church leaders

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Friday excommunication of Elder George P. Lee, the first Indian ever appointed to the Mormon Church hierarchy, came about after he told the leadership it is spiritually slaughtering his people.

And in news interviews Friday, Lee also charged that church leaders are promoting "white supremacy" and "arrogance," and that they are changing the teachings of Jesus Christ.

The first excommunication of a Mormon general authority in 46 years was announced in a terse, one-paragraph statement from church headquarters in Salt Lake City.

"The First Presidency and Quorum of the Twelve Apostles of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints excommunicated Elder George P. Lee of the First Quorum of the Seventy for apostasy and other conduct unbecoming a member of the church. This action was taken at a meeting at which George P. Lee was present on Friday morning, Sept. 1, 1989," the statement said.

Church spokesman Don LeFevre said he could not elaborate on the statement on the instructions of church leaders.

But Lee said the action stemmed from basic doctrinal disagreements with church leaders about the role of Indians in the religion and from his contention the leadership is racist, materialistic and bent on changing the meaning of Mormon scripture.

"It got to the point where I had to follow them or Jesus Christ, and I chose to follow Jesus Christ," Lee said in an interview with the Associated Press Friday afternoon. "I told them they are the ones that are apostatizing — teaching false doctrine."

Lee, 46, was sustained a member of the First Quorum of the Seventy on Oct. 3, 1975. The First Quorum of the Seventy is responsible for administering the affairs of the 6.7 million-member church under the direction of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles and governing First Presidency. Members of the three all-male bodies are known as general authorities.

In an hour-long meeting that Lee said he requested with church President Ezra Taft Benson, Benson's two counselors and the Twelve, Lee read a 23-page, hand-written letter in which he accused his fellow churchmen of distorting doctrine to satisfy their own racial bias, relegating Indians to second-class status and denying them their rightful place in the faith's theology.

"You are slowly causing a silent subtle scriptural and spiritual slaughter of the Indians and other Lamanites. While physical extermination may have been one of (the) federal government's policies long ago ... your current scriptural and spiritual extermination ... is the greater sin and great shall be your condemnation for this," Lee wrote.

Lee's excommunication was particularly sensitive to a church that believes Indians in the Americas are descendants of ancient peoples described in the Book of Mormon, the faith's most cherished scripture.

The Lamanites, as the Indian ancestors are known in the book, were themselves described as descendants of a prophet named Lehi who brought his family from Jerusalem to the New World about 600 B.C. Much of the volume deals with later wars between two peoples descended from Lehi's sons, the Nephites and Lamanites. The book details the destruction of the former by the latter in the 5th Century A.D.

The Book of Mormon was

LDS Navajo members greeted the news of the Friday excommunication of Elder George P. Lee with dismay and disbelief, but say their faith in the Mormon Church has not faltered, nor has their love for the 14-year general authority.

"Our prayers are with him," said Arliene Nofchissey Williams, whose husband's sister, Kitty, is married to Lee. "My heart goes out to the family."

Williams said the news came as a surprise to her. She said she has never heard him speak negatively of the LDS Church or its leaders.

"His advice given to us didn't seem contrary to remaining true," she said.

published in 1830 by church founder Joseph Smith, who said he translated the volume from gold plates given him by an angel.

Lee said prophesies in the Book of Mormon are clear in defining Indians and Jews as literal descendants of the House of Israel and all others as "gentiles," or "adopted Israel."

In recent years, Lee said, general authorities have been preaching that non-Indian members are literal descendants of Ephraim, a grandson of Israel in the Old Testament, "thereby displacing the true seed of Israel" and giving non-Indian Mormons an excuse to ignore their Indian brothers.

"This type of teaching encourages an attitude of superior race, white supremacy, racist attitude, pride, arrogance, love of power and no sense of obligation to the poor, needy and afflicted," Lee wrote.

He questioned whether other general authorities would remain committed to the church if they were not paid for their time and expenses by being given membership on corporate boards, royalties from church books and gifts from well-to-do friends.

Lee, a Navajo and former president of the College of Ganado on the Navajo Reservation, once served as president of the church's Arizona Holbrook Mission. He said the shift in church policy toward the Indians had occurred after the death in 1985 of President Spencer W. Kimball, who Lee said had acknowledged that non-Indians were "adopted into the House of Israel."

He also charged in an interview with KUTV that church leaders are changing scriptures and "saying things that run counter to the teachings of Jesus Christ" and that they are "cutting off all Indian projects and programs."

"I'm sure they're happy they cut me off because I'm a Lamanite," he said. "I have no friends among the Quorum of the Twelve or the First Presidency."

He said he felt that other church leaders had become "unteachable, self-righteous, and these things are very scary to me." He said they consider themselves greater than the ancient prophets such as Moses and Abraham, and "they're saying to me that they can change anything that Jesus Christ had to say or taught, which to me is blasphemous."

In his interview with the Associated Press, Lee quoted Elder Boyd K. Packer of the Twelve as telling him: "I do not want nor wish to be known as an apostle to the Lamanites as President Kimball was." Packer was placed in charge of the faith's Indian programs after Kimball's death, Lee said, and they have been shrinking ever since.

As for Benson, who is 90, Lee said he is so enfeebled by age that his counselors in the First Presidency — Gordon B. Hinckley and Thomas S. Monson — make all important decisions, but in Benson's name.

Navajo and LDS cultures naturally clash

By JOHN DeVILBISS
Standard-Examiner

The co-producer of a television documentary that explores the cultural distinctions of Native American Indians, said Mormons and Navajos are "worlds apart" in culture and beliefs.

Linda Sillitoe, whose documentary "Native AND American" will be shown on KUED Channel 7 on Sept. 24, said the dichotomy that exists between Mormons and Native Americans makes the story of Navajo excommunicated LDS Church general authority George P. Lee even more amazing.

"He is a product of the LDS placement system," she said. "He's really its superstar."

The Indian Placement program, which began in the 1950s, involves LDS Church members caring for Indian children during the school year. At the end of each school year, the children return home to the reservation for the summer. Lee was one of the first to participate in the placement program.

As a foster son, Lee excelled in school and became an example for the church of what the placement program can do for young Indian students. His successful assimilation continued and culminated in 1975 when he was appointed a full-time church general authority.

"He obviously is a rarity to have climbed that high" in a predominantly white church, she said.

Sillitoe, who also co-authored "Salamander: The Story of the Mormon Forgery Murders," said traditional Navajos do not make direct eye contact — they are reticent and non-competitive. For a child with this cultural background to suddenly learn to compete and live in an Anglo society is a drastic shift.

"And he's done all that," she said. "I am amazed at the fervor in which he embraced Mormonism."

In contrast, she said Friday's announcement of his excommunication leaves her feeling dismayed over the church's harsh action.

"Why excommunicate him?" she said. "What has he done? What sin has he committed?"

She said Lee was being critical only because he believed the church was ignoring the needs of its poor and minorities. She said because of Lee's cultural background, which emphasizes sharing wealth, it is easy to see why he could perceive the church as holding back more of its wealth than it should.

She said she does not expect LDS Navajos to leave the ranks of the church to join Lee.

"Indian people and Navajos don't necessarily respond the same way Anglos do," she said. "I tend to think the reaction will be very private and individual."

er, wrote the song "Go My Son," which became an unofficial anthem of the LDS Church's Indian Placement program. Lee was one of the first students in the program, which involves Mormon members housing Indian students during the school year.

Williams said the injustices mentioned by Lee regarding the Mormon Church's treatment of its American Indian members may exist, "but I see injustice, whether from our people or from other people; I see prejudice from all sides."

During an Associated Press interview, Lee said he has basic doctrinal disagreements with church leaders about the role of Indians in the religion. He contends the leadership is racist, materialistic and bent on changing the meaning of Mormon scripture.

Williams said she has never felt that way. She said she is saddened by Lee's excommunication, "but my faith is still strong and firmly upon the priesthood organization and the scriptures, especially the Book of Mormon."

Bill Kelly, assistant director of Brigham Young University's Native American Education Outreach program, said he never expected to hear such an announcement.

Kelly, who last spoke with Lee one month ago, said he has always admired the Navajo general authority.

"He's been someone that people look up to, as I do," he said. "He's a down-to-earth person."

He said Lee always took special interest in the BYU American Indian program and was a frequent and popular speaker.

"He, of course, has always been interested in our program," he said. "He's always helping his people."

Verenda Rainer, of Orem, said she and her husband, John, have always felt close to Lee and were shocked by the news.

"He's a dedicated man," she said. "I have great respect for him."

She said she finds the news difficult to believe, but that her love for him has not diminished.

"He's just a person like anyone else," she said. "Every man makes mistakes. He's a man; we still love him."

Showered & went to bed at midnight.

Sunday Oct 8 1989 Beautiful day. I have a serious headache. We went to all meetings but S.S. Testimony meeting. We ate lunch. Rested. Took Burt and we went to the Mc Kay Hospital to visit Nora Floyd Knight. He looks pretty good. Doctors said he couldn't have a fatal moment or he would die. Only blood. He had an ambulance bring him. Poor Irene. Only blood.

He had come sort of blackout and doesn't remember the ambulance ride. He may go home tomorrow. I took him some roses and a card. He thanked us for coming. We then stopped to visit Bev and Lloyd awhile. Lloyd went to Afton, Wyo. for a load of wood. Saturday afternoon I took Bev. to the grocery store. Then we visited awhile.

Our Bruce said they went for a short hike on No. Ogden Pass. Then to church. We said Connie was at a friends & probably stay with Smiths for awhile. Ravenia Palmer called. We have to help on the "White Elephant" table for ward fair.

Monday Oct 9 1989 Beautiful fall day. I called Evelyn. She said the menfolk went to Cocatello yesterday and she cleaned David and Blake bedrooms. Have there State test. After I got the laundry finished I went to Newgate Mall. Bought the lace panels at Mervyns to bring home to see if they work. Also bought Bev a pr of P.J.'s & also got Edward a pr of P.J.'s. I saw Dr. Dean Bingham and we ate lunch together. She was shopping. Thorn Bingham is in the hospital with pneumonia. He's the time this summer. I went to K-Mart and then went to Ogden City mall. I visited Flossie and Ron Morin was there. He had back + bone surgery from the Dr. Nonbarger of S.L. This is the doctor Dr. Dr. Baron wants Edward to see. Edward need to talk to Ron about the doctor.

Tuesday Oct 10 1989. I helped tye the R.S. quilt at the Church house. Ellen Rogers, Ravenia Palmer, Dorothy Brockbank + Goldie Layman helped. Didn't finish it. Delma Naef stopped by long enough to tell me she couldn't help as she needed to paint their shed. She left me all some peppers and broccli. Came home and cut the peppers up and froze them. Edward put an undercoat of paint on the cellar. He worked in the shop. I went to the grocery store. Connie came to stay the night. Her dad + Nate came to visit and to talk to her to try and get the problem solved. I went to Ravenia to check the tote she got for the "White Elephant" table. Delma Naef, Dixie Denny, Brenda Sudbury and I visited Bernice Howard, Alberta + Allie and Rita

Johnson. All enjoyed our visits, but we enjoyed them especially. Bernice was worried about Curtis as he didn't come home last night or work today. He drove the car and he is restricted to do so. (DUI).

Curtis was in jail for two nights in Payton and the car is impounded, but he can go to work at the mall. Mervin called early to let me know that Nancy Summers died yesterday afternoon. She had cancer. We soaked the flowers and buckets. I made a meat loaf and cooked potatoes and eggs for salad tomorrow. Cloudy evening.

Saturday Oct. 14, 1989 Beautiful fall day. Talked to Evelyn. She didn't take a Friday off as she needs the time to go with Bruce to look for a car. She was making rolls for the deer hunting party. I did light house work. Edward worked in the shop. We went to the temple for Stake temple session. A large group. My back really hurt to get up and down. We took Bsp. Orgill with us. After the session we invited him for lunch. Betty is flying home on Sun. afternoon from Arkansas. I painted two more floor mats for Christmas. Bruce and Brenda stopped by. I ordered Christmas paper from Ben as a school project. I did say "families should be together" refering to Connie. She called late (10:30) to let me know she was staying at Grandma Smith's. Bsp. Orgill picked us up to attend Sat. eve at Sat Conference. Speaker talked about tractor work + need more workers. Bro. Darley spoke and our Regional Representative. Bro. Smoot spoke about temple work. A nice evening. Glad to get in bed to ease the back pain + leg pains.

Sunday Oct. 15, 1989 Partly cloudy and cooler. We went with Bsp. Orgill to Stake Conf. at 9:A.M. Bro + Sister Nielsen + Bro. Anderson spoke also Sister and Bro. Smoot spoke on service. Quake shatters Bay area

At least 272 dead, 650 hurt

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Aftershocks to Tuesday's killer quake shook the battered San Francisco Bay area today as work crews searched for victims crushed beneath a wrecked freeway and stunned Californians struggled to put order back in their lives.

At least 272 people were reported killed and 650 injured in the catastrophic earthquake, which in 15 seconds wrecked buildings across nearly 100 miles. A section of the Bay Bridge and at least two spans in the Santa Cruz area fell, and electric power was cut for as many as 1 million residents.

Severed gas lines touched off fires, including one in San Francisco that burned a block of buildings, but all the blazes were out or under control today.

The quake, 6.9 on the Richter scale, was the second-deadliest in U.S. history, surpassed only by the great San Francisco earthquake of 1906, when 2,500 or more were killed.

The magnitude of the disaster emerged slowly today as officials made contact with hard-hit areas — outlying suburbs and towns where many telephones were cut off.

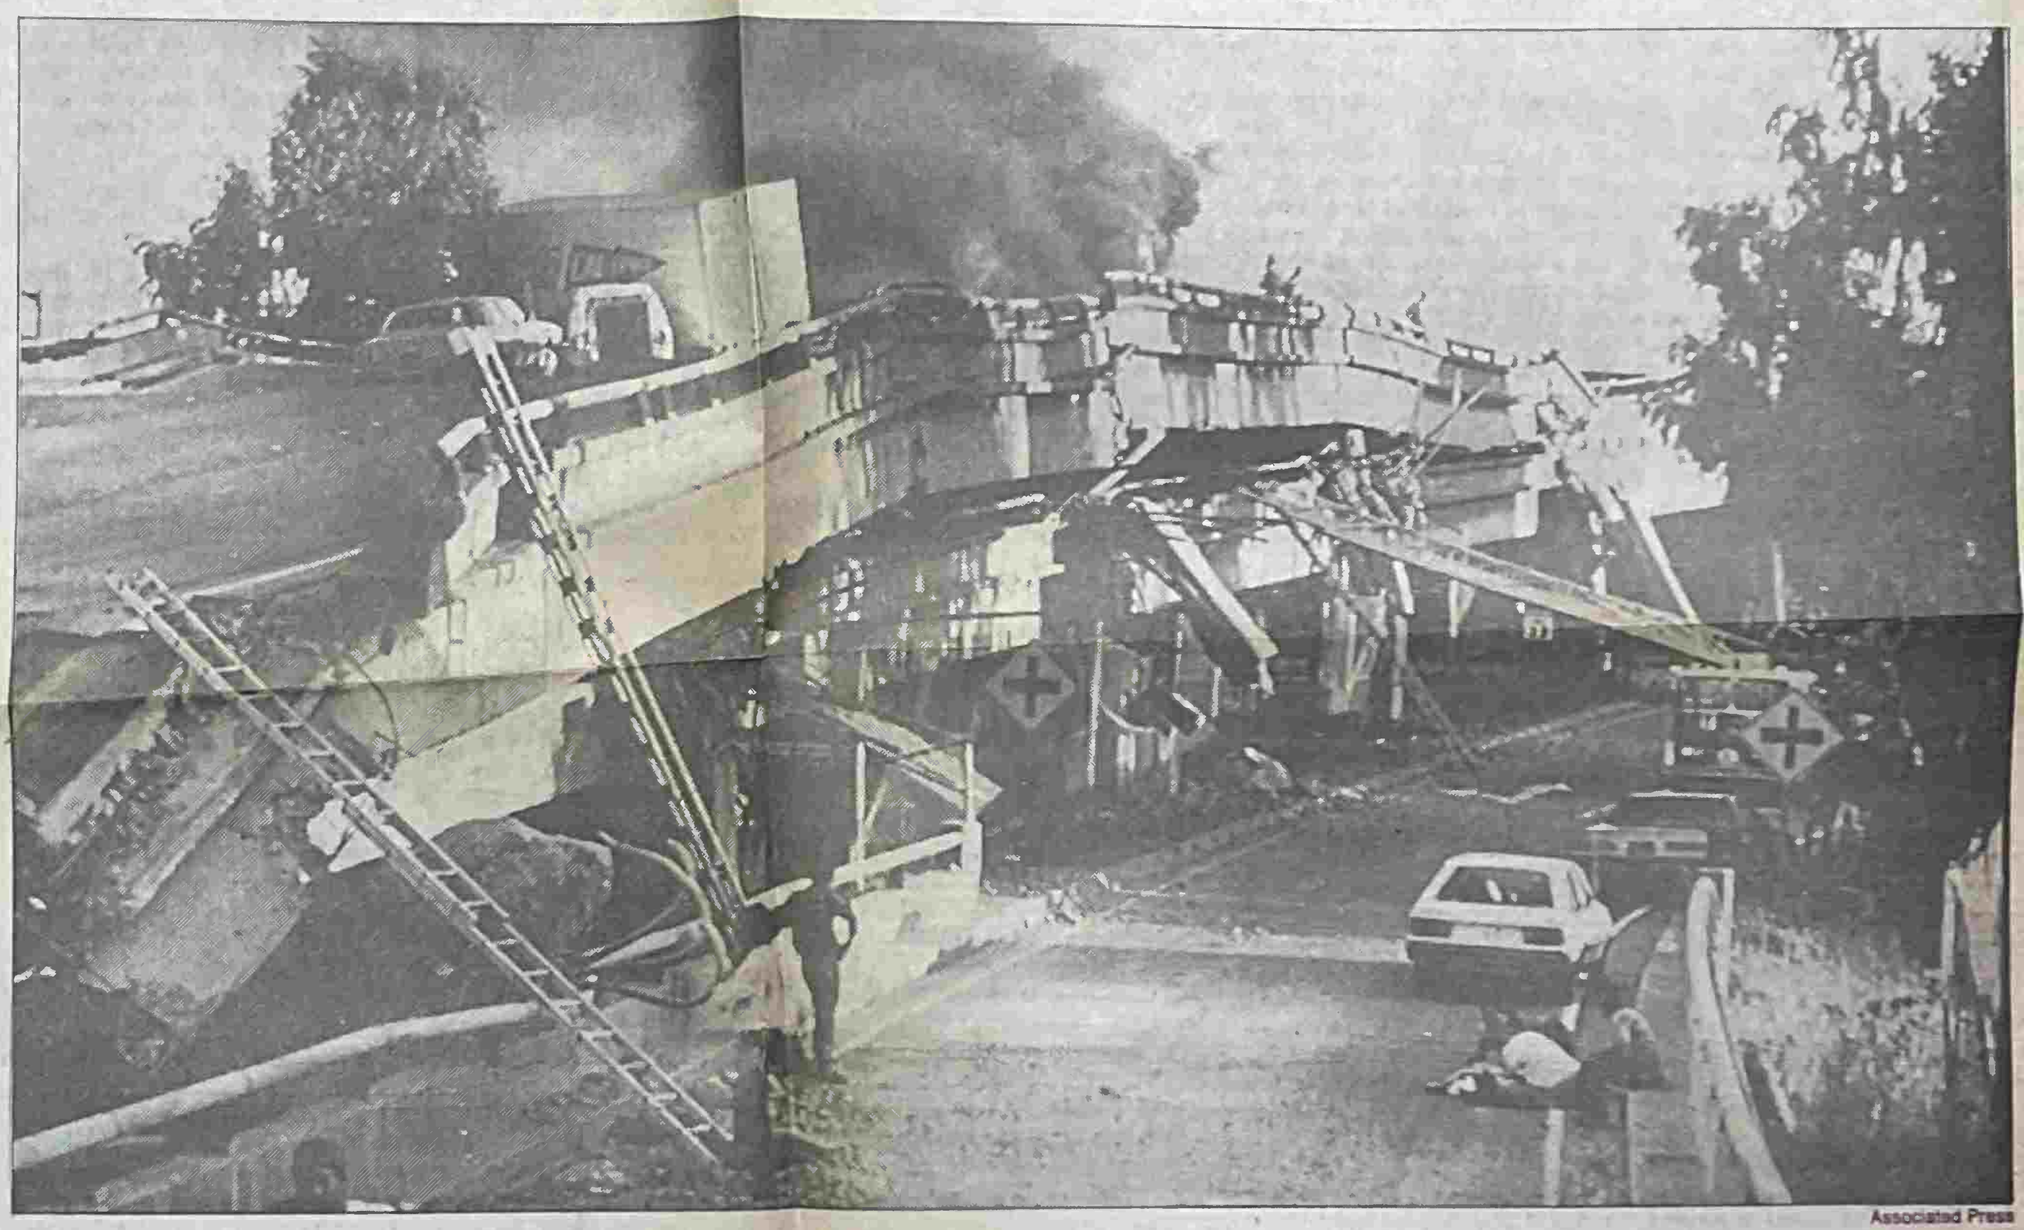

"The devastation is just horrible," said Gov. George Deukmejian, who cut short a trade mission to West Germany. Lt. Gov. Leo McCarthy said damage would total "the better part of $1 billion."

San Francisco Mayor Art Agnos urged commuters to stay home rather than tax the transportation system, crippled by the closing of the Bay Bridge. But as dawn spread over the glass-strewn streets of the region, people tried to revive a sense of normalcy, some making their way to work by ferry, by foot or over highways not blocked by damage. The Bay Area Rapid Transit system reopened this morning, as did Oakland Airport and San Francisco International Airport.

Many people stayed home, however, their workplaces shut down in the quake's aftermath. Most schools and many other institutions were closed as well.

If Wasatch rocks, here's what you can expect

By SCOTT BONTZ
Standard-Examiner

An earthquake could heavily damage the Wasatch Front like it did the San Francisco Bay Area on Tuesday.

Local professors said an earthquake of 7.0 to 7.5 on the Richter scale is expected along the Wasatch Fault roughly every 400 years.

Geological evidence indicates the last major temblor struck Utah about 400 years ago, said T Leslie Youd, a Brigham Young University civil engineering professor who has studied earthquakes and their effects on buildings.

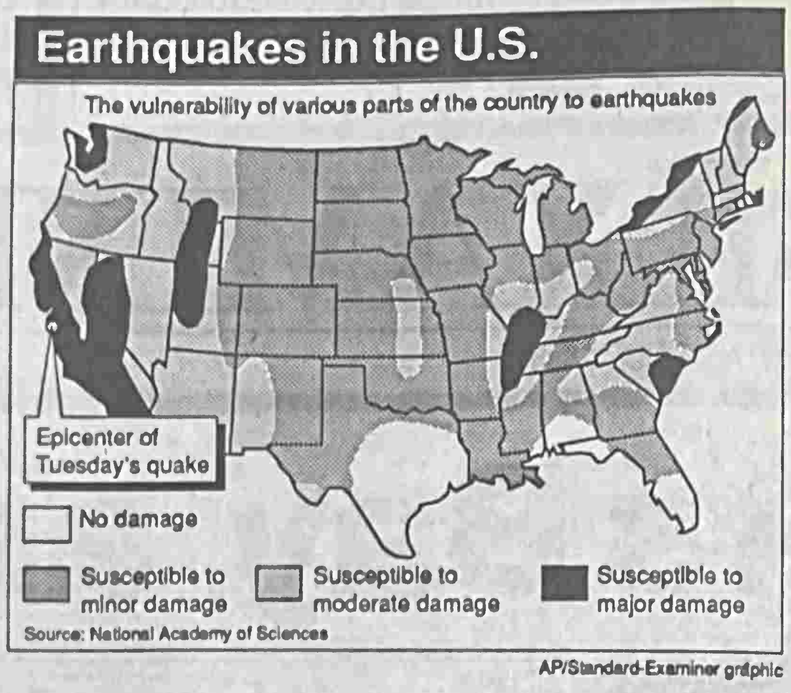

Although California's San Andreas Fault is 10 times more active in terms of major earthquakes than the Wasatch Fault, Youd said this morning, "We can have as big a kind of thing as happened in California. We're vulnerable."

However, the shaking on the coast is not expected to influence fault activity in Utah.

"It's far enough removed," Youd said. "I don't believe it would have any increased potential here."

"I don't think we'll have any trouble here because of the California thing," said Richard Moyle, a geology professor at Weber State College.

Moyle also said Utahns are aware of earthquake potential and new buildings are designed for resisting temblor damage.

AP/Standard-Examiner graphic

Another Weber geology professor, Fred Pashley, said the Wasatch Fault is divided into several segments running north to south, roughly along the west base of the mountains. One of the longest segments runs 42 miles from Brigham City to Farmington, splitting Ogden's east bench and the college's football stadium.

The California earthquake measured 6.9 on the Richter scale, a measurement of the energy released. Youd said an increase of one full point on the scale represents a release of 33 times more energy.

"What we see in San Francisco is very typical of what we expect" in Utah, Youd said.

"Certainly our freeways would be unusable immediately after an earthquake. Some older bridges might collapse. We'd have some major problems."

Most of the front's water supplies cross the fault and could be snapped by earth movement, he said. Utility lines could rupture locally, too. Telephone lines would be jammed.

In addition, the jolt could throw rock and earth down Utah's steep mountains, burying canyon highways and possibly damaging buildings.

Dyke LeFevre, director of the state Department of Transportation's District 1 in Northern Utah, said a major earthquake could stretch and collapse older bridges. He said the most difficult to fix would be spans over rivers.

LeFevre also said Pineview Dam is a worry.

"If the dam would break ... it would wipe out the (Ogden) canyon," he said.

Moyle said if the connection to Pineview water was to become damaged, fighting fires in the Ogden area could be difficult.

In an emergency, LeFevre said, state and federal transportation officials would meet and open special networks for fixing damage. He said UDOT has emergency authority to bring in contractors to make repairs immediately rather than going through the normal bidding process.

A legislator who has been studying Utah's earthquake preparedness hopes the California earthquake will spur acceptance of his bill to improve the state's seismic recording system.

"We have not had a significant upgrade of our seismic system for 20 years," said Sen. Craig A. Peterson, R-Orem.

More accurate information is needed to gauge the types of stresses Utah buildings might experience in a major earthquake, he said.

Peterson's proposal includes installation of motion detectors in buildings throughout the state.

"This would allow us to observe how buildings would respond and what would be the necessary structural enhancements," he said Tuesday.

Peterson said he hopes the California earthquake will impress on Utahns the importance of preparation, but, "I wouldn't wish that on anyone, that we'd have to have these real-world examples to reinforce it on us."

Youd said that if a major temblor strikes the Wasatch Front, residents should prepare to lose water service for three days. He recommended keeping emergency supplies on hand to make relief work easier.

Youd said strapping water heaters to floors or walls can prevent breaking gas lines and subsequent fires like the kind that burned in San Francisco.

"One of the biggest damages is material coming of shelves," he added.

Youd said that with compliance with modern building codes that include earthquake safety construction, much damage can be avoided.

"(An engineer) can make a big difference at very little expense," he said. "If you build it right the first time, it's much cheaper."

Moyle and Pashley said most Wasatch Front development is built over unconsolidated sand and gravel that amplifies ground motion more than bedrock and more solid earth.

"We don't have much built on solid rock," Moyle said.

Pashley said ground further west is made of finer particles and has a higher water table. The result in a major earthquake could be liquification of the soil and lateral slides, he said.

However, Pashley said soft Wasatch Front ground still should be more stable than the man-made fill material under some of the heavily damaged parts of San Francisco.

In contrast to the San Andreas Fault, in which land-plates movement is lateral, the earth shifts vertically along the Wasatch Fault.

Pashley said that if the segment through Ogden had a major shift, the east stands of the WSC football stadium could rise 6 to 9 feet above the field.

"It would no longer be a level field," he said. "If our segment slips ... anything across the fault will be destroyed, of course."

In addition, Pashley said, campus buildings west of the breaks would tilt slightly to the east because the fault face is curved. Bigger buildings would have to be torn down, he said.

this morning in a telephone interview. "We thought something was wrong with the elevator. We could hear cables hitting back and forth."

When their elevator opened up on the ground floor, they found the Poulsens in the lobby under a table. The two couples then went down Powell Street — which had broken glass scattered all over it — and ended up at the new Marriott Hotel, which is not even scheduled to officially open until Friday.

They spent the night on the floor of an underground room at the hotel. The hotel provided them with blankets, and emergency power kept lights on and television reports coming in for the several hundred people spending the night there, Bailey said.

Bailey

"I spent the duration of the quake trapped in an elevator between floors at the Holiday Inn near Union Square," Dee said this morning.

He called the Standard-Examiner from a pay phone in San Francisco. Dee said there was a line-up of survivors waiting to use the phone today.

The water quality meeting the three officials were attending suddenly took a fairly low priority with Dee in light of the earthquake. It has taken a lower priority with the city.

Poulsen said the Moscone Center, where the conference was being held, by today had been set up as a Red Cross station.

Dee said he was helping today as best he could downtown by pulling people away from sidewalks where they might be hit by falling debris or glass.

"Everyone gets out on the sidewalk and looks up," he said.

He also said he was monitoring the Bay Area's response to a major earthquake — something not unlike what he has to prepare for at home, with Ogden situated on the Wasatch fault.

"The city responded quite well," Dee said.

Most emergency services in San Francisco were well-deployed and worked efficiently, with the exception of some emergency generators for tall buildings. This posed a problem for people, like Dee, who were trapped in elevators, and it poses an ongoing problem because radio and television communication is mostly unavailable to residents with no power.

"The power remains off in most of San Francisco even this morning," he said.

The effect of that is a news blackout for San Franciscans, he said, "People are crowded around every available radio. Hundreds are gathered around cars listening to the radios."

Despite that, things were going fairly well today, he said.

"I was really pleased with the mood of the people," he said. "We heard reports that there was some looting. We did not see any of that. We saw people helping each other."

The group was scheduled to leave Thursday, but travel arrangements have now become tentative with transportation in and out of the Bay Area problematic because of quake damage.

Meanwhile in Ogden, city council candidate David Haun today called for more Northern Utahns to head to the Bay Area to help quake victims there and learn a little about emergency services during an earthquake's aftermath.

"I am asking the city manager to discuss this matter with the appropriate county officials and would strongly urge we send a small delegation of city and county officials to help our friends and neighbors in northern California in their time of need," Haun said in a prepared statement.

Missionaries safe, says LDS Church

Standard-Examiner staff

SALT LAKE CITY — The LDS Church said today that none of its missionaries were injured in the earthquake that hit the San Francisco area.

Jerry Cahill, church spokesman, said this morning, "All of the missionaries in the area affected by the earthquake are safe and unharmed."

Cahill said the Church's emergency response committee has been activated, but hasn't announced what steps it will take for other disaster relief in the area. The church has bishops storehouses in the area, he said, and already has agreements with the American Red Cross to cooperate in providing assistance as needed.

He also said there are no reports as yet of serious damage to church buildings or other facilities in the area.

"We've had a lot of questions about the Oakland Temple," he said. "A preliminary inspection indicates there are no major failures evident. There are some cracks in the interior, but it's not yet been determined how serious those cracks are."

The temple was already closed for major renovations, he said, and the contractor and structural engineers will make a more thorough inspection as soon as possible.

The latter two require the approval of the nation's Parliament, and that is guaranteed by the strong central control of the government.

Krenz, like Honecker, is considered a Communist hard-liner. However, he signaled a softer stance when he reportedly urged police to stop their harsh crackdown on the thousands of people who have been staging protests in recent weeks.

The change in leadership comes as East Germany is still reeling from the exodus in recent months of tens of thousands of its citizens seeking better wages and more freedoms in the West. The flight has been followed by public dissent unprecedented under in this Communist country.

In Washington, President Bush said Krenz' rise to power was unlikely to signal fundamental change.

"Whether that reflects a change in East-West relations, I don't think so," he said. "Mr. Krenz has been very much in accord with the policies of Honecker. So it's too early to say."

In Bonn, West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl welcomed the leadership change and said he hoped Krenz would "make the way free" for a better life for East Germans.

"We hope that in the interest of our countrymen that the reform process that has been so sympathetically received in Poland and Hungary and also in the Soviet Union will finally get its chance in East Germany as well," Kohl told reporters.

threatened to sit on the pad if necessary to halt the launch, but liftoff took place without incident.

The astronauts were to release the 6,700-pound Galileo from Atlantis' cargo bay about 6½ hours after liftoff, starting it on a six-year, 2.4-million-mile journey through the solar system to Jupiter, the biggest planet.

The mission ends Monday in the Mojave Desert at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif. Besides Williams, the crew members are pilot Mike McCulley and mission specialists Ellen Baker, Franklin Chang-Diaz and Shannon Lucid.

Anti-nuclear activists last week lost a lawsuit to block the launch. They charged that the 50 pounds of plutonium that supply electricity to Galileo could scatter radiation over Florida in the event of an accident.

NASA says the chances of a plutonium release are 1-in-25,000, and even if there were a release there would be no appreciable harm to the public.

I called Brenda early to tell them we wouldn't be over to their Sacrament meeting or eat as we would eat about 1 o'clock. Edward called Kurt to come to eat and he went to get her. She was having a ~~bad~~ sharp pain back of her shoulder blade. We got her in comfortable clothes, tens stylend and heat pad. Later the pain eased and I prepared her dinner. She ate and enjoyed it. She rested awhile then Edward took her home. Lori Poll called her and chatted. Edward + I rode over to Bruces + visited awhile. Mat + Jody was there. They went to Sac. + stayed for dinner. Connie is at Smiths. Derwin + Betty had stopped to leave us some apples. I called + thanked them.

I called Colleen Haines to ask how they got thru the Calif. earthquake. They are fine / no damage. Called Evelyn. Marlene, Whit + Evelyn went to the deer camp to see the men folk. Blake shot a deer on opening day. I talked to Marlene. They were going back to Logan. Pres. + Sister Robert Nielsen stopped by. He misplaced our mission release papers and found them and delivered them to us. We were released - May 28 - 1989. We thanked him. We enjoyed their short visit. I called Kurt and she was feeling ok. no more pain. Beverly called to chat. Her arms and legs hurt - arthritis yesterday but feel better today. Eldorlie got a deer today.

Monday Oct 23, 1989 Warm breezy day. Edward took the car to Ally Ever but he was to busy to check it until next Thursday. Edward laid more cider blocks. He has 6 more to do and the two partitions will be finished except for painting. My leg still hurts, as does Edwards back and leg. I wiped the walls of kitchen and frontroom. I got a big cloth on the broom and got the high walls. I put the frontroom window panels in the washer on gentle for a few minutes. Hung them outside on the line and sprayed them and let them dry and re-hung them. The privacy drape rolls need to be dry cleaned next spring. I went to the store and also exchanged Edwards Pajamas. Howard Jensen and Lyman Anderson came home teaching. Derwin and Betty visited awhile and they brought me a new pie plate. He didn't find the pie I took to her. East and West Berliners crowd the wall of the Brandenburger Gate, facing to the West. Thousands of East Berliners came to the West last week after the border gates opened.

The fall of the wall
BERLIN

It has come to be the embodiment of the term "Iron Curtain" and the symbol of the Cold War itself. Now, it seems well on its way to becoming a relic.

By CHARLES M. MADIGAN
Chicago Tribune

There is no modern piece of symbolism, no barbed wire border, no prison cell that carries more powerful meaning than the 103-mile wall that surrounds West Berlin, separating a small island of democracy from the stormy sea of communism that surrounds it.

It is 13 to 15 feet high, made of concrete and topped in some places by razor wire. It has self-firing guns and booby traps, guard towers and spotlights powerful enough to illuminate every inch of the no-man's-land it circumscribes.

At the height of the Cold War, it was the place that produced powerful images of what communism was actually like, from dramatic photos of border guards hurdling barbed wire to cold, black-and-white news pictures of victims sacrificed in a desperate run toward freedom.

Since its construction in 1961, the wall has served as the final barricade for as many as 191 people who died trying to escape, according to estimates from West German human rights groups.

Its existence was proof that, given the chance to leave, few people would opt for life in a communist world. Getting out was worth risking everything, even life itself. That free passage would ever be offered through the wall was inconceivable — until Thursday.

For the people on the inside in West Berlin, the wall serves as a concrete canvas for colorful graffiti acclaiming democracy and freedom and a constant sign that their city is a Western anachronism trapped deep in communist East Germany.

For the East Germans on the outside, it is an ever-present reminder that when a war ends, the spoils collected by the victors often include the souls of the defeated. More than anything else, geography and timing that placed them behind Soviet lines determined the course of their lives.

Although updated and reinforced many times, the Berlin Wall is the product of another era, when the superpowers were testing their strengths on a playing field still raw from the carnage of World War II.

Chronology

A chronology of the Berlin Wall, erected 28 years ago at the height of Cold War tensions:

- Aug. 13, 1961 - East German troops move to seal all access to West Berlin after a mass exodus of hundreds of thousands of East Germans threatens their economy.

In the following days, barbed wire is replaced by concrete barriers. Houses along the border are sealed. Border guards are issued shoot-to-kill orders for all those trying to flee.

- June 26, 1963 - President Kennedy visits West Berlin. In a show of solidarity with the divided city, he declares to a cheering crowd of 400,000 at the wall: I am a Berliner.
- June 12, 1987 - President Reagan visits West Berlin and calls on Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev to tear the wall down.
- March 8, 1989 - The last fatality related to an escape attempt over the Berlin Wall is recorded. An East Berlin man falls to his death. 80 East Germans have been reported killed trying to flee over the wall since 1961.
- Oct. 18, 1989 - Hard-line leader Erich Honecker, who supervised the building of the Wall, is replaced after an unprecedented wave of unrest and the exodus of thousands of citizens.
- Nov. 3, 1989 - In the first direct challenge to the wall's purpose, East Berlin announces that East Germans who want to flee West can do so over the Czechoslovakia border. Tens of thousands do so.
- Nov. 9, 1989 - The Communist leadership declares that citizens can travel directly to West Germany through East German checkpoints with proper documentation. Thousands of East Berliners make their way to the Berlin Wall. Officials waive the requirement for visas and thousands stream over to West Berlin for a night of celebration.

Ogdenite feels the pulse of Germany's excitement

By PHIL JENSEN
Standard Examiner

OGDEN — Inge Adams, a language professor at Weber State College, says the breach of the Berlin Wall brought tears to her eyes.

"It isn't very often that I get teary-eyed at my age any more, but, gee, that was almost too much," said Adams, who was born in West Germany and emigrated to the United States in 1955.

"My students were asking me just Wednesday if the wall would fall." Adams said Friday in an interview at her WSC office. "I said, 'Yes, but it will take some time.' I never thought it would happen."

Adams said she has tried to call her parents, who live in Stuttgart, West Germany, since the remarkable events of last week unfolded, but couldn't get through the busy circuits.

"It is just incredible, just absolutely incredible," said Adams, who has stood at the infamous barricade to freedom many times on regular visits to her homeland.

"I want to go there now," she said. "I want to be there, to feel the pulse of the wonderful excitement that is spreading through that country."

The excitement reached climactic proportions Thursday and Friday after communist East Germany opened the Berlin Wall for the first time since it was erected in 1961 and allowed unfettered emigration.

East Germany, to the unimaginable joy of peoples on both sides who crossed by the tens of thousands, later announced that the wall would never rise again.

One family reunited by East Germany's sudden and stunning moves has lived apart on a German farm separated by the borders for 28 years, Adams said.

She said the mayor of Hof, West Germany, Ogden's sister city along the East German border, took her to a border farm last summer to see a family split by ideology.

"The border ran right through the farm," Adams recalled. "The parents lived on one side and the children lived on the other and they were never

Wall's opening is hopeful, tenuous

It is rapprochement like no other, the uniting of Eastern and Western Europe with the surprise opening of the Berlin Wall.

A dark symbol of oppression since Aug. 13, 1961, the infamous wall has crumbled.

Change is coming in East Germany at a pace that is difficult to comprehend. Long-established patterns of politics are suddenly dislodged.

No one could have predicted with any assurance the momentous events of the recent days that are seeing East Berliners streaming to the other side for the first time in 28 years, celebrating in the streets, kin embracing, dancing on top of the wall, popping champagne corks, basking in an indescribable feeling of jubilance at this turning of the tide that has once again united Berlin.

Not only are the barbed-wire borders disappearing, East Germany's pro-democracy opposition has made free elections its main demand.

In a dizzying series of events, East Germany's reform picked up momentum when new Communist leader Egon Krenz purged the old guard from the party Politburo and slimmed it down from 21 to 11 members. He then announced that free and Democratic elections were coming to his Communist nation — a clear response to the mass flight to freedom that has engulfed his government in the past month.

Friday, Krenz made the incredible announcement that opened the floodgates of freedom and in what seemed more fantasy than reality to the Germans, he allowed his people free access to the West.

Political events in the past months have been stunning. Poland pulled off free elections. Hungary pulled off a peaceful transition from communism to multiparty democracy without dissent from Moscow.

As the threat from the East declines, other possibilities stagger the imagination: Border crossings in Europe without guards. Hungary and Poland members of the European Community, no Warsaw Pact, no longer any need for NATO, competitive elections, freedom of movement, freedom of the press, an end to command economies. Democratic and capitalist Western aspirations transforming Eastern Europe.

Built to keep people in rather than to hold them out, the wall of concrete, barbed wire and burned out apartment buildings has mocked freedom and amplified the lunacy of communism's claim to superiority.

Now this barrier that has too long been the world's deadliest boundary, one reinforced by anti-vehicle barriers, trip wires and machine-gun armed guards with vicious dogs is — if East Germany leaders are sincere — being dismantled.

East Germany has lifted travel restrictions on its citizens who have been held in rigid control by their government and has said that workers would poke holes in the infamous wall.

This most dramatic shift in postwar Europe is heartening. However, lest we forget Tiananmen Square, the much coveted reform of Eastern Europe held prisoner by the Berlin Wall still must be viewed as tenuous, not yet irreversible.

Utahns set shining example with vote

One thing is crystal clear: Utahns set an extraordinary record for voter turnout last week. One shining example is the nearly 100 percent in the small village of Huntsville with equally enviable percentages in other cities and towns for off-year elections.

Understandably, the Olympics, more than any other issue, as the incentive for voters to travel to the polls. Heavy voting in Weber County can be attributed to the high interest in the now-defeated proposal to consolidate Ogden and Weber school districts.

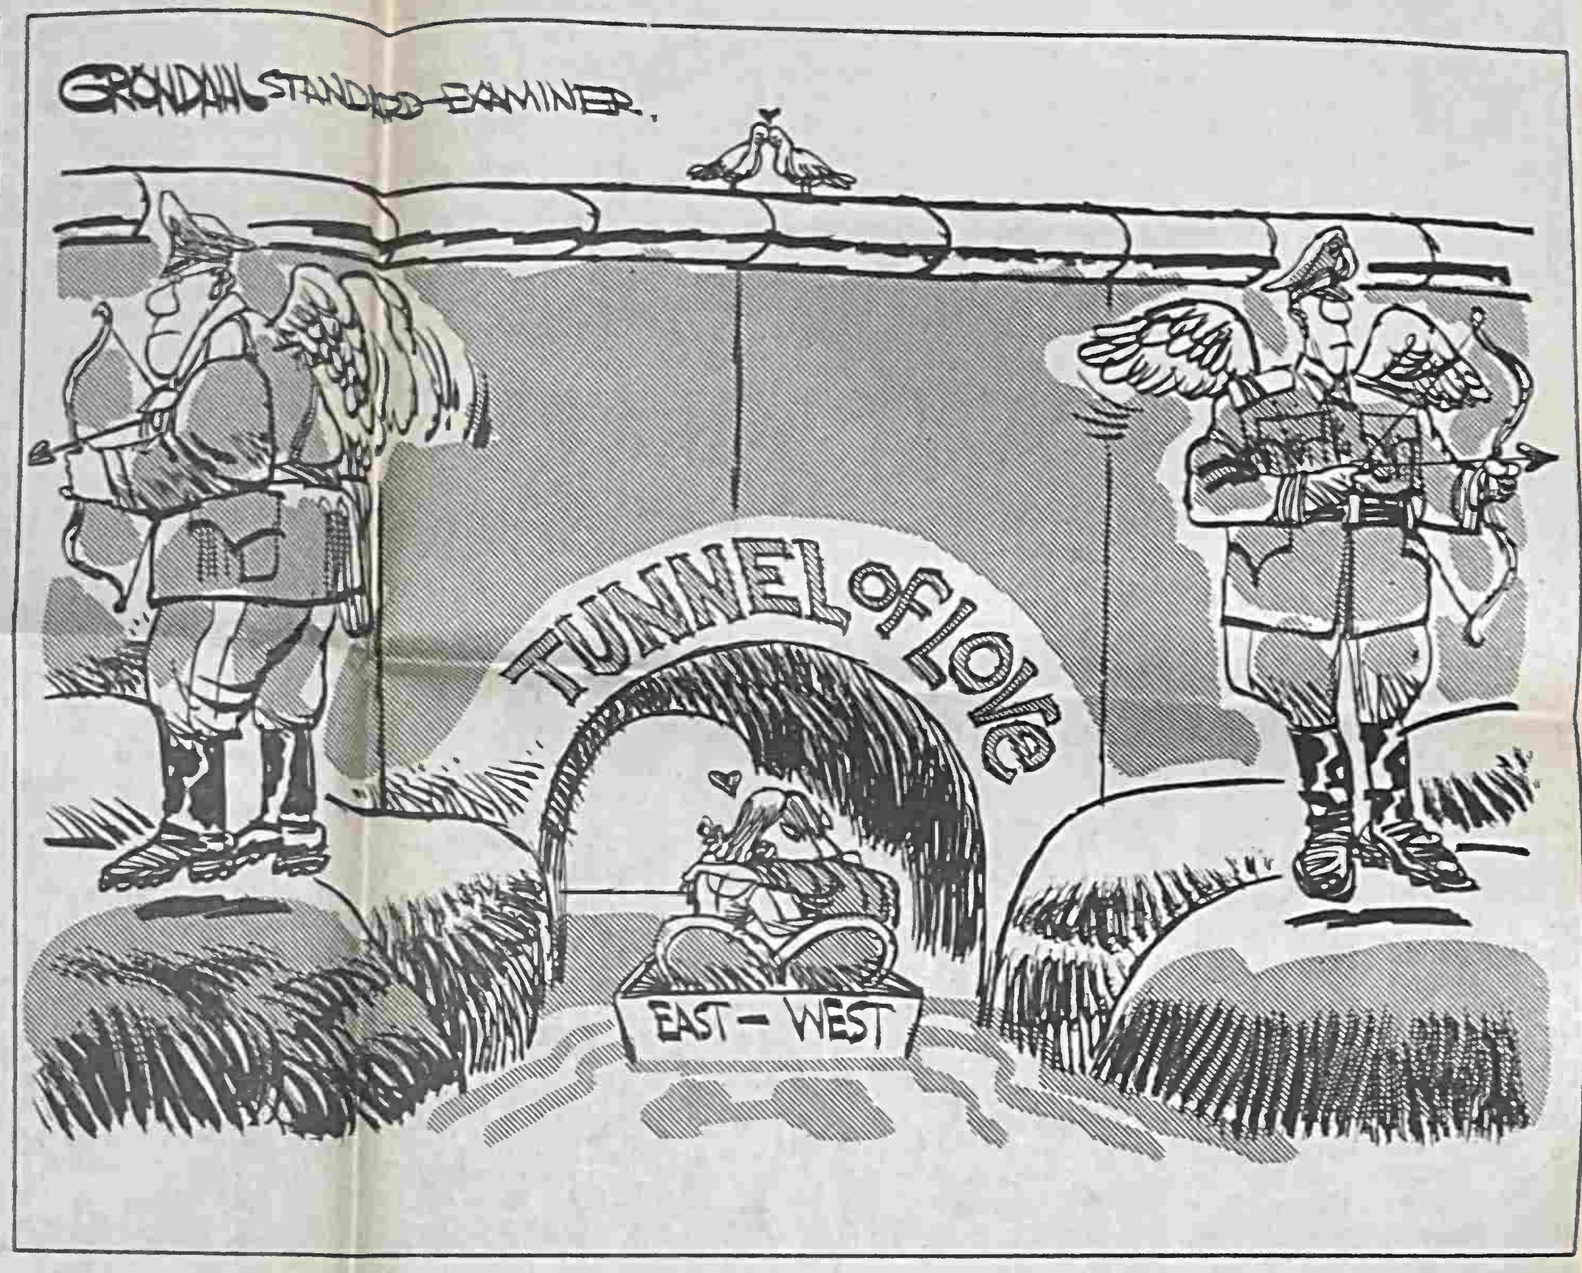

What is baffling is the murky but resounding message of the voters who turned out mayors in large numbers and voted substantially for women, electing them to local government posts in more instances than in any recent election.

In community after community and more particularly along the Wasatch Front, mayors fared poorly. And there is no way to define what was bothering voters. There was no set pattern, there were no apparent driving issues. Their reasoning behind the purge of mayors is further compounded by the record number of incumbent council and town board members who enjoyed constituent support and were returned to office.

It may reflect that perhaps there is a subtle dissatisfaction with the delivery of government services, and the person at the helm had to take the brunt, suffer the blame. So their voting instinct was to "turn out the rascals."

And this seemingly pervasive instinct as reflected in the vote is not at all bad. It is the greatest example of how our democratic system works, our government by "we the people." As a result of voter preferences, government has been reconstructed in many communities.

It's easy to interpret that the large turnout is a welcome sign of reinvigorated interest in becoming a participant in the democratic system of government and that possibly there is at hand an end to the embarrassing apathy toward the voting process. At any rate, Utahns distinguished themselves Tuesday and set a memorable example of how "we the people" manage our government.

It's worst of times for Dukakis family

Mary McGrory

WASHINGTON — The distressful news about Kitty Dukakis, who was rushed to the hospital after she drank rubbing alcohol, is another sad chapter in the post-election saga of the Dukakis family. Last February, Kitty Dukakis got institutional care for alcoholism.

She's coming out of it, amid a clamor of public speculation. The most harrowing rumor — that her husband would resign — was put down. Was she trying to end a thirst or end her life? The only certainty is that she wanted the world to know how unhappy she is.

Her misery may baffle other women. She is pretty, talented, charming, adored by her husband, surrounded by eminently satisfactory children. Her days are full. She makes speeches, travels, is fussed over, applauded. It is in a way an extension of the campaign, which she loved.

All the aspects of her life add up to quite a bit for those viewing it from the outside. For her, plainly, it is not enough.

Her husband came away from seeing her at the Brigham and Women's Hospital to cross the street and visit his ailing 86-year-old mother at Beth Israel.

Michael Dukakis may feel like Job. His approval rating in his home state stands at 15 percent; his budget deficit at $700 million. The state legislature treats him with contempt and spits on his requests for taxes. The "Massachusetts miracle" that he touted all over the country has vanished. Any suggestion that he might run again brings shudders within his party.

From all the adversity and humiliation he is suffering, you might have thought that Michael Dukakis was being repaid by Providence for some unspeakable offense against God or mankind. All he did, we should remember, is run for the presidency — ineptly, it is true — and lose. Barry Goldwater did, too, and is a subject of sentimental reverence.

"We treat losing candidates hard," muses John Sasso, Dukakis' campaign manager and promoter of the Dukakis candidacy. "Especially in Massachusetts."

Adlai Stevenson lost the presidency twice, but to the end of his life, he was adored by millions of Democrats. They forgot that he lost; they remembered the music of his speeches.

Dukakis' ultra-political home state cannot forgive him for losing a race they thought he should have won. They despise him for not defending Massachusetts, which was an issue in the campaign, sneered at by Bush as the home of misfits and extremists. Dukakis' first answer in the second debate — the rape answer — can still generate angry groans.

Was Kitty Dukakis' desperate act on the eve of another election a way of ending the "what-might-have-been" speculation that was consuming her?

"Kitty is up-front about her emotions," says a family friend. "Michael minded just as much, but he plodded on."

The governor, proceeding on his joyless rounds, could tell himself that the slump in Massachusetts is being felt throughout New England, that its decline was not a consequence of his absence on the campaign.

But driven, wound-up Kitty Dukakis, what did she tell herself? She threw herself into the campaign with total commitment. She loved speaking. Her father, Harry Ellis Dickson, was first violinist of the Boston Pops orchestra, and performance is in her blood. She was a hit on the trail. A Pennsylvania woman delegate said as Kitty swept into her state's caucus, "I like her much better than him — she smokes, she swears and she wears expensive clothes."

When she traveled with her husband, he was a different candidate. His starchiness softened. He seemed human and warm. He even laughed. Once, toward the end of the campaign, in Missouri, when he had discovered the new slogan "On Your Side" and she was at his side, he almost danced across the platform. But Kitty Dukakis insisted on her own schedule, on solo appearances. Did she reproach herself? Who knows?

Or was she bitter at the savagery of the Bush campaign? Did she brood over a know-nothing western senator's slur about a non-existent "picture of her burning the flag in the '60s"? Was she angry that her husband never responded to that, or to Boston Harbor, Willie Horton, the Pledge of Allegiance? The doctor cited "exhaustion and depression." No wonder.

Her husband's legacy is the lesson he learned the hard way. He has wistfully been telling friends that this year's Democratic candidates plainly benefited from his failure. He watched with some satisfaction as Douglas Wilder and David Dinkins answered negative commercials right away. One Democrat, James Florio of New Jersey, launched preemptive strikes against his opponent. It's a bitter legacy from a bitter campaign. No wonder Kitty Dukakis took a swig of rubbing alcohol. It couldn't be worse than the gall and wormwood she's been drinking for the last year.

Reagan is helping Carter's comeback

Sandy Grady

WASHINGTON — The toothy grin and preachy, high-pitched drawl — trademarks that flopped on television — are still there. At 65, the face has more wrinkles, the haircut a touch of silver.

But Jimmy Carter seems younger, bouncier, jauntier every day.

Why not? Everywhere he goes, Carter swims in a sea of applause, smiles, autograph seekers, hand shakers — glorious waves of redemption.

To everyone's surprise, possibly including his own, Carter is a Born-Again Ex-President.

"This appears to be Jimmy Carter Week in Washington," said stooped, craggy Ed Muskie, his former secretary of state. "We're delighted to welcome him back."

The crowd boomed solid, heartfelt applause, a foreign sound in the era when Carter was haunted by gas lines and Iran hostages. For two days, Carter heard more grateful cheers in the capital that once scorned him than in four White House years.

When he handled questions in a town-hall meeting at Georgetown University, a former hostage in Iran, Barry Rosen, got a note. "You saved my life. You're my hero."

"Why didn't I get questions like this from the White House press corps?" quipped Carter.

It was a reunion of the Loyal Legion of Carterites — Fritz Mondale, hugging jowly Jody Powell, still wisecracking and combative; Bert Lance, the bear-shaped banker. "My first thought, looking at this crowd is, why don't we take over?" joked Carter, only semiond thought ... "

But it isn't merely Peanut Brigade vets who greet Carter back from oblivion. Heavy media hitters, Time, the Washington Post, the New York Times, run adulatory pieces about Carter's comeback — "endorsements," he sighs, "13 years too late."

The ironic truth is that nobody has done more to resurrect Carter than Ronald Reagan. As Mondale told a reporter, "When you compare his (Carter's) riding a bus to New York to fix up apartments with Reagan flying to Tokyo and picking up $2 million, people appreciate it."

Gently needling Reagan's Japanese money grab, Carter deadpans, "I don't usually criticize other former presidents, but if you hear of a deal like that, let me know."

The Ron-Jimmy contrast runs deeper. Carter, a Bible fan who knows Ecclesiastes, must marvel at how the wheel of fate has spun.

Reagan's popularity, glowing when he left for Bel Air, Calif., seems to be sinking, esteem for Carter, defeated as a weakling and failure, rises.

As Reagan's feel-good rhetoric fades, we're stuck with the debris of scandals, Me-First greed, the deficit. Sure, Carter was a president who made us eat our spinach. But themes of his presidency — energy conservation, human rights, Camp David accords — look better in time's rear view mirror.

I suspect the wheel will keep turning Carter's way. Unfortunately for the Reagans, with Ron's $2 million sellout and Nancy's ill-spirited book, their image matches poorly against the Carters' do-good binge — building houses in ghettos, scraping up food and polio shots for East Africa, overseeing elections in Nicaragua.

Even in a reunion's noisy cheer, Carter turned serious. He gets along well with George Bush. But he pushed Bush to respond to Mikhail Gorbachev's moves on arms control and Eastern Europe, "the transforming events of our lifetime," with more gusto.

"We have not yet got our act together," warned Carter.

The Carter gang had its typical glitches. Why hold a Carter reunion on the 10th anniversary of the Iran hostage crisis?

"Now," said Mondale, mocking ruefully, "you see why we lost."

On a weekend of laughter and memory, Carter couldn't resist a final preachment. "I'll throw in a line from my farewell address," he said. "America didn't invent human rights. Human rights invented America."

The crowd was on its feet applauding as Jimmy and Rosalynn rose to walk into the roar and shake old friends' hands.

It is a sound Carter — unlucky in the presidency, lucky in retirement — will hear more of.

In politics, if you stay alive, what goes around, comes around.

Wards no longer need pay operating costs

By JOHN DeVILBISS
Standard-Examiner

The LDS Church has announced it will no longer require local ward congregations to pay their own operating expenses, and local Mormons reacted favorably Sunday to the news.

A letter issued last week by the LDS Church's First Presidency instructs church leaders to no longer require budget assessments — often hundreds of dollars — from individual members.

This requirement had been one of several financial requests made of the church's members, including the payment of 10 percent of one's gross income for tithing, a monthly fast offering and a missionary contribution.

The letter, signed by church President Ezra Taft Benson and his two counselors, Gordon B. Hinckley and Thomas S. Monson, was to be read across church pulpits Sunday.

In congregations where the letter was read, there was much discussion on the matter, with members expressing pleasure and welcoming the surprise announcement.

Reed Hadfield, president of the Brigham City Stake, said the announcement was "well-received" by all the leaders and members in his jurisdiction.

"It speaks well of the church members along the Wasatch Front," he said. "It shows the strength and growth of the church."

But with the announcement comes "a multitude of questions" about just what areas of local operations the church will cover and what it will not — questions that have yet to be answered, he said.

The First Presidency announced in the letter that more details on the new program is forthcoming.

"For many years we and our predecessors have looked to the day when tithes and offerings would cover essentially all expenses incident to church membership," the Nov. 15 letter from the First Presidency began. "We have been concerned over the financial burdens resting upon some church members who have, notwithstanding these pressures, been faithful in paying their tithes and fast offerings and also have made substantial contributions to ward budgets."

The letter said the faithfulness of the church's members in the United States and Canada over many years has made possible the growth of the church in parts of the world where there are new members who are financially struggling.

The First Presidency said the church has reached the point where initially in the United States and Canada, general church funds can be used to cover all ward, branch and stake expenses.

"The governing principle is that members who pay their tithes and offerings may expect that from these contributions the other expenses incident to membership will be met," the presidency said.

The First Presidency said that with this policy change, budget funds should no longer be raised, nor should there be other assessments or fund-raising projects. Fast offerings, however, will continue to be collected to assist those in need.

"We ask all Latter-day Saints to observe the designated fast and to contribute to the church a generous fast offering, for the blessing of both the needy and those who give," the presidency said.

The presidency instructed wards and quorums to likewise contribute to the general missionary fund.

Registration funds for the Boy Scouts program will be provided to the wards from the church as a part of the budget allowance, but the Scouts sustaining membership assessment will continue to be raised in a separate solicitation.

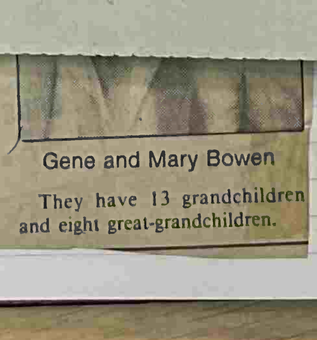

The First Presidency also requested that any church units with funds in bank accounts should withdraw those funds and contribute them to the general funds of the church "since such local funds will no longer be needed to finance ward and stake costs."
